

BREAKING bryansquared completes THIRD trade in 14 days — Kittle, Jonathan Taylor and James Cook pried from zhyman before Monday lunch · zhyman playoff odds down 22 points by noon

BSPN LEAGUE INSIDER INVESTIGATION · MAKE IT (DY)NASTY

BLOOD ON HIS HANDS

Three trades in fourteen days. A 24-point playoff surge. And every single manager who answered the phone got worse. A BSPN League Insider investigation into the bryansquared rampage.

● Reporting Live By the League Insider Desk · Updated July 20, 2026, 11:53 AM ET — minutes after the third body dropped

CORRECTION · JULY 20 An earlier version of this story reported that DD00GZ lost the No. 1 seed "without making a single move." DD00GZ did in fact make a move, trading David Montgomery and a 2028 3rd to GKrebs for Jordan Addison on July 13. BSPN regrets the error. DD00GZ's day, per an earlier statement, remains ruined.

Good evening. We begin tonight in the Make it (dy)Nasty dynasty league, where our investigative desk has spent two weeks following the money, and folks — the money leads one place. On July 6, bryansquared was the 9-seed at 42% to make the playoffs. Tonight he is the 4-seed at 66%, he owns the best first-round-bye odds in the league at 34%, and the league office is missing three rosters' worth of talent.

Here is the part that should keep the other eleven of you up at night: he didn't get hot. He didn't hit on a waiver claim. He made three trades in fourteen days — and his three trade partners lost a combined 35 points of playoff odds while he pocketed 24 of them. Ijwestwood, down 10. brochillington, down 3. And this morning at 11:53 AM, while zhyman was presumably on his third meeting of the workday, the man walked out of his roster with George Kittle, Jonathan Taylor, AND James Cook. zhyman: down 22 points before noon. That is not trade activity. That is a redistribution of wealth with a group chat attached.

But every wildfire has an ignition point, and our timeline puts patient zero on July 13 — when brochillington, two weeks before training camp, publicly challenged this league's commitment to roster management. He did it the way all great commissioners of chaos do: with a photograph of the only member of his household maintaining a professional offseason routine.

THE GROUP CHAT · JULY 13 · ENTERED INTO EVIDENCE

We got one week until training camp and this is the league

BSPN fact-check: training camps open July 28, which was fifteen days away, not one. The desk has elected to let it slide. The man lit the match — the math was decorative.

What happened next is a matter of public record: three trades cleared the wire that same day. Five within the week. The league went from group-chat silence to a full-scale arms race in a single afternoon, and the manager who profited most from the stampede wasn't the man who started it — brochillington himself got fleeced 48 hours later (see Exhibit B). No, the man who profited was already waiting by the phone.

"It ruined my day."

— DD00GZ, AFTER SEEING THE TRANSACTION

Consider the tempo here. Monday night, he turns two wideouts into Malik Nabers. Wednesday, at 8:44 in the morning — a time when normal people are negotiating with a toaster — he buys Rome Odunze and pays with his own 2028 first-rounder, which is either supreme confidence or a cry for help, and his odds say it wasn't a cry for help. Then this Monday happened. The numbers below are sworn testimony.

And one more thing before the evidence table, because our desk found it at 2 AM and hasn't slept since: this didn't start in July. Back on May 14, bryansquared quietly acquired Brian Thomas Jr. and Oronde Gadsden II from CharmCity20. Both of those players were later shipped out as ammunition in the July trades. That's not activity, folks. That's premeditation. He wasn't building a roster in May — he was loading the weapon.

THE PAPER TRAIL

Four transactions, pulled from the league's Sleeper ledger — three from the window, plus one from May that reads very differently in hindsight. The league office confirms all four are, regrettably, legal.

FILM ROOM The average peak wide receiver season lands at age 26.95 . Smith (27) was sold at the exact top of the curve; Thomas and Gadsden (both 23) were bought on the ramp. That's not luck — that's a man who reads aging-curve research and then does crimes with it.

Two wideouts for one — and somehow the man who got two is the one who called our tip line. ljwestwood is the only other double-digit faller on the board.

ljwestwood playoffs 54% → 44% ▼10

FILM ROOM This is the textbook consolidation premium: four quarters don't equal a dollar, and market data from thousands of real Sleeper trades shows managers consistently pay extra to turn two good players into one great one — because the side with the best player usually wins. Nabers is 22; the average WR peak season arrives at ~27. bryansquared bought the entire ramp. The sim agrees: westwood got MORE players and LESS future.

brochillington playoffs 15% ▼3 · and Odunze is gone

FILM ROOM The research cuts both ways here. Behavioral economists Massey & Thaler's "Loser's Curse" (Management Science, 2013) found decision-makers systematically overvalue draft picks relative to proven production, and dynasty research shows future picks already trade at a discount. Translation: bryansquared sold lottery tickets at sticker price for an age-24 WR entering his peak window — and if he contends, that 2028 1st lands in the late-round range whose surplus value the paper says everyone overpays for. The rebuilding side of this trade is defensible too. The rebuilding side would also like Odunze back.

Five players is not a return package, it's a memorial service. zhyman went from 7th to 10th before his lunch break.

zhyman playoffs 54% → 32% ▼22

FILM ROOM Here's where the research raises an eyebrow at OUR guy. Running backs decline 16.8% in PPR points per game from age 26 to 27 — Taylor is 27, Cook is 26. And the graceful-aging tight end is mostly a myth: strip out the generational outliers and TE production falls off drastically after 31. Kittle is 32. bryansquared bought the back half of three aging curves at consolidation prices — this is a one-or-two-year all-in, and the RB age cliff does not take meetings. Meanwhile zhyman walks away with five players age 26 or younger, which is exactly what a teardown should buy.

DUDE WIPES

Somebody call cleanup. When a trade leaves a mess this big, paper towels won't cut it. DUDE WIPES — the official post-trade cleanup partner of the Make it (dy)Nasty league. Extra-large. Flushable. Strong enough for a fourteen-day rampage.

OTHER NOTABLES

The stories that would lead this newsletter in any two-week window that didn't contain a crime spree.

The champ is wobbling. CharmCity20 — the two-time former champion, the man with the hardware, the reason half this league has trust issues — has slid from the 4-seed to the 6-seed, and he can't blame inactivity: he's been party to FIVE trades since the draft. He sold DeVonta Smith and Michael Wilson to bryansquared in May (see Exhibit Zero — yes, the champ armed the gunman), swapped Chris Olave and Keaton Mitchell to mattkendall1 for Zay Flowers and a first, and shipped Travis Kelce out the door for Sam Darnold in June. His bye odds are actually UP four points. Everything else is down. That's not a retool, that's a man rearranging deck furniture at a very confident pace.

And the quietest man in the league is climbing. itsders — who has not sent a group-chat message since the draft, possibly since the Obama administration — is quietly up two seeds, from 10th to 8th, +5 in playoff odds. His loudest move: a May 29 pick-flip with ljwestwood that netted him TWO extra 2026 firsts. He has never commented on it. He has never commented on anything. Analysts believe he communicates exclusively through the accept-trade button.

THE FULL LEDGER

Every other trade since the NFL Draft (April 25, 2026). bryansquared's four are prosecuted above; these are the rest.

- Apr 28 ChessNerd420 acquires bryansquared's 2026 1st from GKrebs for two 2026 2nds. Even before the rampage, the man's picks were circulating like currency.
- May 14 brochillington acquires Josh Downs (WR, 24) from CharmCity20 for a 2026 2nd and 3rd. A responsible, age-appropriate purchase. Remember this newsroom fondly for it.
- May 24 mattkendall1 acquires Chris Olave (WR, 26) and Keaton Mitchell plus a 2026 2nd from CharmCity20 for Zay Flowers (WR, 25), a 2026 1st and a 2027 3rd. mattkendall1 is +14 in semifinal odds since — the chat was too busy with the rampage to notice.
- May 29 GKrebs acquires Amon-Ra St. Brown (WR, 26) and a 2026 3rd from zhyman for a 2027 1st, a 2026 1st and a 2026 2nd. In hindsight: the FIRST body in zhyman's teardown. He was selling at the exact WR peak age two months before bryansquared came calling.
- May 29 itsders acquires two 2026 1sts (via zhyman and CharmCity20) from ljwestwood for his own 2026 1st and a 2nd. The Silent Climber stockpiles. Massey & Thaler would note that accumulating more, cheaper picks is literally the optimal strategy in the paper. itsders has almost certainly not read the paper. He simply IS the paper.
- May 30 ljwestwood acquires Najee Harris (RB, 27, currently unemployed) from chrisapplegate for two late picks, following a pair of pick-swaps the night before. An age-27 running back without a team, purchased at midnight, one week after the age-27 RB decline research made the rounds. No further questions, Your Honor.
- Jun 7 DD00GZ acquires Travis Kelce (TE, 36) and Michael Wilson from CharmCity20 for Sam Darnold. Research says tight ends fall off a cliff at 31 unless they're generational. Kelce is 36. This is either an outlier bet or a farewell tour with a roster spot. (DD00GZ also bought rookie TE Josh Cuevas for $40 FAAB on June 1 — the full tight-end experience.)
- Jul 13 GKrebs acquires David Montgomery (RB, 29) and bryansquared's 2028 3rd from DD00GZ for Jordan Addison (WR, 24). One side bought a WR entering his peak; the other bought an RB two years past the cliff. The odds table upstairs will tell you which was which.
- Jul 13 ljwestwood acquires rookie RB Dylan Sampson (21) from mattkendall1 for a 2028 4th. A perfectly normal trade. We checked it twice anyway. Force of habit at this point.

So where does that leave us? chrisapplegate is your new No. 1 seed at 75%, and DD00GZ — who made exactly one measured, responsible trade, Montgomery-for-Addison, the kind you'd bring home to your parents — watched the throne get pulled out from under him like a folding chair anyway. mattkendall1 jumped 14 points in semifinal odds while the chat was busy prosecuting bryansquared — the loudest quiet move of the window, hiding in plain sight.

And note the symmetry the board can't hide: there are exactly two double-digit fallers in this league — zhyman (–22) and ljwestwood (–10) — and both of their signatures appear on paperwork with the same counterparty. That's not a trend, that's a common denominator with a jersey.

The research verdict, because you asked for journalism: the aging-curve literature says bryansquared consolidated into stars, sold at peaks, bought pre-peak, and paid for it all with the one asset class — draft picks — that peer-reviewed research says people chronically overvalue. He did everything the papers recommend, right up until Monday morning, when he bought a 27-year-old running back, a 26-year-old running back, and a 32-year-old tight end — three assets the same literature lists under "sell." Four trades since the draft, one 2028 first-rounder lit on fire, and a lineup of Jonathan Taylor, James Cook, Malik Nabers, Rome Odunze and George Kittle. Is it reckless? The research says eventually. Is it working? Twenty-four points says presently. The window is one, maybe two years wide — and the man built it in fourteen days. He must be butter, folks, because he is ON A ROLL — and the rest of this league is the toast.
